

JAMAICA INN

A week in the life

It begins the moment you arrive at Jamaica Inn. You sense a warm, familiar feeling. The sensation grows stronger after check-in, when the bellman exchanges your bags for a generous smile. It continues to grow as you walk the beautifully manicured grounds to your oversized, antique-appointed room. And then, standing on your private, spacious verandah drinking in the magnificent vista of the Caribbean Sea, it all becomes clear. You've come home.

Welcome Home

Where for more than 50 years the Morrow family has endowed the Inn with a timeless grace and understated elegance.

Where coconut palms and fragrant blooming night jasmine dot the grounds, pleasing the senses and replenishing the soul.

Where a pristine crescent-shaped beach welcomes home the gentle waves of the sea.

Where the staff genuinely delights in the pleasure of your company and senses your every need.

And where, as one smitten guest put it, your faith is restored in the "simple joys of living."

behind and were embraced by one that whispered.*

No television or radio. Only the magnificent surround sound of the sea.

We started everyday by dining on our private verandah.

Have any meal delivered to enjoy in the comfort of your own suite.

Spoil yourself with Room Service for dinner, where each course is brought to your candlelit verandah.

We were impressed by these two reviews.
And even more impressed that they were written 54 years apart.

the best part of the island was the east side.

Jamaica Inn, with its secluded beach setting and its small but smart dance pavillion has won for itself a reputation for friendly exclusiveness, if you accept paradoxes.

When it comes to luxury you can't beat the spa

The White Suite, on its own glorious peninsula, delivered a prime setting for a passionate amateur painter.

Over the years, the legendary White Suite has served as the private preserve of media moguls, novelists and poets. But perhaps none coveted it more than a certain Prime Minister, when he and Lady Churchill visited on several occasions. As lovely as it is, it was probably not the suite's dramatic sun terrace right over the ocean, but the spacious grounds and private pool that lover of seascapes adored the most. From there, the avid amateur artist would have unobstructed views of billowy white clouds and blue water. One can only imagine his painterly delight.

The rooms opened up. After a while, so did we.

Forty-eight spacious suites and four two-bedroom cottages offer enchanting views of the beach and sea. Each features elegantly crafted poster beds, ceiling fans and authentic Jamaican antiques. Louvered doors and shutters encourage a refreshing breeze, while the couch on your private veranda invites a luxurious afternoon snooze.

The ghosts of Marilyn Monroe, Noel Coward and Katharine Hepburn inhabit the bar, ensuring forever that one will never drink alone.

Look around you in the glow and they almost appear. Marilyn and Arthur Miller at a small table toasting their honeymoon. Ian Fleming, James Bond's creator, signaling the bartender for a cocktail "shaken, not stirred." Noel Coward engaged in conversation with friends, knocking around witticisms like so many croquet balls. And Errol Flynn, rogue that he was, holding court with who knows whom. Our lounge and bar is a place of relaxed glamour and was one of their favorite haunts.

Our private cottage is truly a paradise within a paradise.

Tucked away in a private enclave at the end of the hotel's champagne colored beach are the crown jewels of Jamaica Inn. Magnificent and exquisitely appointed, these one- and two-bedroom cottages hug the coral cliffs above the blue Caribbean. Tropical colors and dark wood combine Jamaican tradition with Indonesian flair. Open terraces provide a view to the sea and serve as a picture-perfect setting for sunset cocktails. Imagine it: the ultimate luxury villa combined with all the amenities of Jamaica Inn.

The urgency of time was swept away and we found ourselves totally at peace.

Designed for the perfect balance between luxury and nature, the cottage overlooks a private pool that seems to cascade into the sea. Fresh air and light flood in through wide French doors in the living room and bedroom. The oversized Italian marble bathroom with two vanities leads to an al fresco shower. This is everyone's haven of choice.

Perched on a bluff, the Ocean Spa massages the body, mind and spirit.

They sold us nothing, but we could do everything.
